An active IRA unit of between four and six men is thought to be planning the assassination of a leading British politician or a bombing campaign before the general election.

Senior police officers have named two possible members of the gang as Sean O'Callaghan and John Downey, who is wanted in connexion with bombings in London parks last year in which 11 soldiers were killed and 50 people injured.

Commander William Huck-lesby; head of Scotland Yard's anti-terrorist branch, said yesterday: "We know there are others and I think I know who they are." "This election is now a contest between Conservatives and the Alliance. There can be no hope of Labour winning". At the Alliance's press conference earlier yesterday Mr Steel had maintained, despite opinion polls showing support for the Alliance steady at 18 per cent, that tactical voting could change the position drastically by polling day. People would realize that Labour "are not only incapable of forming a government, but are also incapable of forming an effective Opposition".

Mr Steel said that, after the disintegration of its campaign through disagreements on fundamentals in its manifesto, Labour seemed to be "out of the running". It was going downhill rapidly because of the "open warfare" which had broken out in its leadership.

Tomorrow the Alliance leaders will helicopter into Ettrick Bridge in the Borders to discuss detailed tactics. They have decided on the main strategy, to concentrate the attack on the Conservatives. They will go for the Tories on their record and the "lack of hope" in the present manifesto. Dr David Owen, the former Labour Foreign Secretary, said at the press conference that and although they would continue to highlight Labour's shortcomings, "it is now necessary to focus our attention on Thatcherism."

Mr Steel said that despite the lack of movement in the opinion poll figures on Alliance support, he and other cam-paigners had detected a groundswell of new backing in the constituencies. He expected that to show in the polls over the weekend.

Trade falls £180m into red

By Frances Williams

Economics Correspondent Britain's balance of payments on current account plunged into the red last month and new figures confirmed that the country has become a net importer of manufactured goods for the first time since the industrial revolution 200 years

The figures released yesterday by the Department of Trade are highly embarrassing to the Government in the run-up to the election. Opposition politicians lost no time in claiming that they proved Mrs Thatcher economic policies had failed.

The balance of payments swung from a surplus of £565m in March to a £180m deficit last month. While exports sagged imports surged to record levels,

Over the past three months exports have risen by 3.5 per cent in value and 3.5 per cent in value and 1.5 per cent in volume. But imports have jumped by much more - up by 8.5 per cent in value and 3.5 per cent in volume - as industry has begun to meet record consumer

At home in the country of Agatha Christie

First published in 1911, Small Country Houses of Today, edited by Lawrence Weaver (Antique Collectors' Club. £17.50) takes you straight to the heart of Agatha Christic Land. Or that is the immediate impression. These surely are the very residences of her prosperous and not very imaginative middle class - the Colonel, the Bank Manager, the Retired Indian Civil Servant, the Doctor, the Imaginary Invalid, the Widow with a Past.

One house is singled out as having a "man's room" (not tation in unsuitable circumwhat Americans call a "men's stances of forms admired in room") for callers one wouldn't wish to admit to the rest of the higgledy-piggledy combination house – just the place for seeing of a number of unlikely creditors, revenants and blackmailers. There is even a touch house!" of Tony Perelli, Edgar Wallace's Emel music-loving gangster in On the Spot, about the Birmingham villa specially designed to accommodate an amateur organist.

Emerging from Agatha Christie Land we come upon some real houses, and it is reassuring to find that Weaver, too, has his reservations.

They are not, however, the kind of houses Poirot cared for. Comfortable? No doubt. But the most trivial and the most self-assertive design.

Not for them the unpretentious but satisfying simplicity such complacent clients or were of, say, an early eighteenth-century farmhouse (roughly the know a large house in Buckingsame size as many of these hamshire built in 1901 for a particular Edwardian confections), agreeable even when was particularly fond of a taken from a pattern book, as certain hill, and caused the most of them probably were.

The Edwardian purchaser seems to have had good value for his money. The house with the "man's room" mentioned above also contained three sitting rooms and five bedrooms and cost less than £2,000. A thatched cottage in Wales, which "though it has three sitting rooms of adequate size, yet it may rightly be called small, as it was designed for a hand (of course by people who lady with one servant, and has had a gift for it), the exploionly four bedrooms, cost under £800.

Compare these prices with the £56,000 that may be asked and obtained today for one of a row of 20year-old bungalows that seemed to me expensive at their original prices of under £4,000. Yet in the 1930s money would oc-casionally go farther than before the First World War.

> Early in the decade friends of mine, seeking to economize, sold their much-loved family home, but found instead a tolerable substitute in Norfolk. This consisted of a striking Georgian Gothic "cottage" with three or four sitting rooms. 10 bedrooms, stables and lodge, together with 20 acres of parkland for... £3,000. Of course it still required what we now call a "staff" of four to run il, so that opportunities to

As late as 1953, if you kept your eyes open, you could find almost unbelievable bargains. Thus an advertisement in The Times might (and did) lead to a beautiful and unspoilt early Georgian farmhouse containing three sitting rooms, four or five bedrooms and such delights as a spiral staircase to the attics together with an acre and a half of land for £2,500. # Soothing face of a savage thriller

Crime writing has two faces. Or rather backsides. There are the spreading hips of the cosy, and there are the lean buttocks of the hunter. An example of the cosy is Puppet for A Corpse by Dorothy Simpson (Michael Joseph, £7.95), a whodunit in the fine tradition of the puzzle game, if with more of real human dilemmas in it than, say, most of Agatha Christic.

William Mcllvanney's The Papers of Tony Veitch (Flodder & Stoughton, £7.95) takes us to the underworld of Glasgow where rumours of a fine haul to be made effectively stir the murk and bring into thoughtful action once again the eponymons detective of his first strength of the attraction of the

Mr Justice Webster in his judgment noted the funitations of what he had been asked to decide. The Limitations Act, 1980, made an exception to the six-year rule where a mistake was discovered after a long delay, but only where the plaintiff could not have discovered it earlier by using "reasonable diligence".

The case turned on the defination of "reasonable dilicould mean to Sotheby's and mean that which an ordinary prodent purchaser of a work of art would do, given all the circumstances."

In contrast to the closed doors of museums and galleries on May 2 for the May Day Bank holiday, most of Britain's showplaces will be open to tourists and holidaymakers on Monday, the spring Bank

On May 2 those wishing to visit public amenities, particularly the dozens of museums galleries in London, on a wet Bank holiday found them shut. In letters to The Times readers asked why.

The simple answer is that the May Day Bank holiday has not sufficiently imprinted itself in the calendar, and that with many places normally closed on Mondays the administrators were doubtful whether there would be enough visitors to make opening worth while.

The extra cost of paying staff on the Bank holiday and the fact that, with union blessing, most staff wanted the day off, made it more difficult.

Thus the British Museum the National Gallery, the Tate, the Hayward, the Victoria and Albert and the National Gallery of Scotland were among the many closed. All those and more will be open on Monday The Greater London Council

He said there must be some minimum standards which would render the detention unlawful, but he did not consider those in the European determined to bring the arts to the people, keep its houses, such as Kenwood and the Ranger's Convention to be appropriate in House at Blackheath, open on

The National Geographical Society and the Canadian Government both contributed funds to the expedition which found the Bresdalbane. The ship lies 340ft under the Arctic icecap 60 miles north of Resolute in Canada's far north. It is believed to be the furthest north that a shipwreck was ever found.

The fascinating story of the discovery was told by Dr Joseph Maclinis of Toronto at the Washington press conference where the wheel was unveiled. Dr MacInnis, a physician and explorer with extensive experience of diving in the Arctic, had been single-

EEC heads for July cash crisis

From Mario Modiano Athens

Mr Piet Dankert, the Socialist President of the European Parliament, predicted here vesterday that unless the problem of increasing the EEC's financial resources was solved at the Stuttgart summit next month, the Greek presidency of the community in July might run into a full-fledged crisis.

"We are running out of cash," he told a news conference here after talks with Greek leaders on the problems of the EEC presidency, which Greece assumes by rotation for the second half of this year. "This means serious trouble," he said. "If there is no breakthrough during the German presidency, the Greek presidency will have a particularly tricky time".

He was surprised to find that Dr Helmut Kohl, the West German Chancellor, had come out against an increase in contributions. "This indicates a shift of position," he said.

There was evidence that the larger countries were insisting on a fair return. This, he said, was creating problems in view of the need to stimulate the economies of the southern member countries.

Giovanni is a cumbersome affair, its heavy scenery obscuring the vital entrances on stage right up to and including the fatal arrival of the stone guest himself. Lumbered with such an production, the house has visely cast the present revival from vocal strength. There are no weak links in the new team and one or two very strong members indeed for Mozart's dramma giocoso.

Samuel Ramey in the title role, for a start, in his first London appearance as Gio-vanni. Physically he is a little slight for the part, so he turns Giovanni into more of a gypsy tearaway - shoulder-length curly black locks, golden earring - than Spanish grandee. But the sense of the predator is there, the menace of the man who challenges all and gives a fig for unbody. Mr Ramey's bass-bari-tone has been growing in quality and power rapidly over the past few years, as a steady flow of opera sets testifies, and this Giovanni, lithe and dangerous, is conspicously well sung,

The events which the opinion polls suggest are giving the electorate the confidence to re-elect Margaret Thatcher continue to cause alarm and despondency in academic and diplomatic circles. In the latest issue of The Round Table. Sir Cyril Pickard, former High Commissioner in Pakistan and Nigeria, maintains that: "The Falklands crisis has undermined our confidence in the Government's capacity to follow a consistent national policy in our foreign relations." Sir Cyril argues that foreign policy has been subordinated to domestic political considerations; that after years of consistent ministerial rejection of a Fortress Falklands policy, that is now the policy to which the Government is committed; and doubts whether the policy can hold. "We sailed a few bomb fuses away from disaster in the Falklands," writes Sir Cyril. "In other fields risks of this magnitude could be the prelude not to Exocet but a nuclear holocaust."

The paintings, mostly modern British and French impressionist, include several Dufys and a Gainsborough drawing. Christie's will not speculate yet on the total value.

Renaissance English, Manhattan

Last week the Prince and Princess of Wales opened the "Renaissance at Sutton Place" exhibition in the sixteenth century mansion near Guildford in Surrey. This was the triumphant culmination of a year's active promotion of this new cultural centre. Enthusiastic articles have appeared in almost every newspaper and glossy magazine extelling the taste and munificence of Stanley J. Seeger, the American millionaire who has established and endowed the Sutton Place Heritage Trust. Rather less press coverage has been given to the recent public inquiry about unauthorized alterations to this listed historic building. This inquiry begs questions which have yet to be answered about the quality of and the motive behind the

The Sutton Place Heritage Trust was launched in June 1982, when a press release announced that Sutton Place "is experiencing a new renaissance that recaptures its former sixteenth century glory as a centre of social and cultural influence". The glittering list of trustees includes Henry Moore, Sir Peter Scott and Dame Margot Fonteyn, and a programme of cultural events has been organized under the direction of the executive trustee, Roger Chubb, who formerly ran Sotheby's now defined branch in Torquay. At the centre of the enterprise is Mr Seeger's own art collection, which has been installed in the house.
Sutton Place had been sold in 1980, four years after the death of J. Paul Getty, who had bought it from the Duke of Sutherland in 1959. The sum of £8m was paid for the house and its 1,000 acres by the Eagle Trust and Management Company, who bought it from Anglo-Texas property, formerly the Sutton Place Property Co. About 330 acres and the house were leased to Mr Seeger, who then established the Heritage Trust. Meanwhile another 68 acres were sold to Messrs Sainsbury for £6m to build a superstore outside Guildford and more land may be sold for housing. sums have already been spent there.

which suggests that the Sutton Place venture is not pure cultural phil-anthropy. Nor could it be, for huge Most has been spent on the new landscape garden which is undoubtedly the most impressive and most successful achievement at Sutton Place since 1980. This was designed by Sir Geoffrey Jellicoe, and is gardening on an eighteenth century scale unparalleled in twentieth century Britain. Huge amounts of earth have been moved to create a lake and, nearer the house, walls, hedges, urns and ponds have been disposed with wonderful ambition through a wood ends with an extraordinary wall by Ben Nicholson and there is a Miró pool. All of this enhances the character of the old

The same, unfortunately, cannot be said of the work carried out within Sutton Place itself. The house was built by Sir Richard Weston in the 1520s. The exterior is particu-larly beautiful because of the combination of weathered pink brick with the rare ornamental terracotta used for the windows. Because it was fived in by the recusant. Weston family for four centuries, Sutton Place remained remarkably unspoilt with, as in the most interesting houses, each century leaving a contribution. Naturally the present owner wished to leave his mark, but this seems to bave involved eliminating much of the work of earlier occupants and has been done with markedly less sensitivity. In the great hall, panelling has been removed and a sixteenth century chimney piece replaced by another from elsewhere. Victorian heraldic stained glass has been taken from the staircase.

The Getty legacy is similarly elittled. The famous pay-elephones installed by that belittled. telephones installed by that mean multi-millionaire have gone, although they would have been an entertaining relic, and Mr Chubb pours scorn on the glass-fibre ceilings installed by Getty. These are, in fact, perfectly elegant, harmonious and convincing in style, which cannot be said for the selfconciously avant-garde redecora-tions carried out since 1980. Walls have been painted white while a seventeenth century staircase panel-ling has been decked out in pink, grey and blue. Not even the interior decorators employed by the National Trust have ever dared treat an historic house so cavalierly.

Sutton Place is, naturally, a listed Sutton Place is, naturally, a listed historic building and alterations to listed buildings require planning permission. This, for certain works, the trust's architects neglected to secure. The recent public inquiry, which has yet to report, occurred because Woking District Council because would be a position and bravely challenged the painting and removal of panelling and the removal of the stained glass. The council also opposed the displacement of one of the original terracotta windows to allow for a temporary fire escape. This was brave because they were faced by an intimidating phalanx of expert witnesses drawn from the trustees: Sir Roy Strong,

Lord Nerwich and Sir Hugh Casson. Sir Hugh's presence at the inquiry was not unexpected, for it is his firm, Casson, Conder & Partners, that has carried out the alterations in

From the outside, Sutton Place, J. Paul Getty's Surrey home, looks very much as it did 400 years ago. Inside, the new occupant is making changes which have the support of leaders of the artistic establishment. Gavin Stamp takes a more critical view the house. The essential purpose of these has been to accommodate Mr Seeger's art collection, which is apparently valued at £25m. Loyd Grossman in Harpers & Queen described this collection as "major" and "stunning in its breadth and quality. Others may possibly disagree. The odd Monet, Van Gogh, Bacon, Picasso and Hockney seems overwhelmed by a mass of 1950s contemporary painting plus an admixture of African and pre-Colombian tribal art.

To sustain the impression that Sutton Place is still a private house. many paintings are displayed in rooms with thick pile carpets and walls lined with tactile corduroy. The result is not a modern treatmen which might complement an old English country house but some-thing which recalls a New York apartment, recently done up and furnished by a fashionable interior decorator for prestige publication in the Architectural Digest.

This is all a matter of taste of course, but questions remain - apart from wondering what sort of person will pay £50 a ticket to come to this stockbroker belt answer to Glyndebourne. The first is: who is Stanley Seeger? American millionaires seem to feel obliged to become recluses but Mr Seeger takes it further than most. His name does not appear in any of the standard American reference books and the BBC found that the file on him was missing from The New York Times records. Some reports say he is from Wisconsin, others from Texas. We presume the fortune comes from oil. Mr Seeger does not live at Sutton

Place. Instead he has installed Mr Chubb, as the chief executive of the trust, to live in one wing in, we presume, solitary grandeur, assisted by the staff of 60. It must be a wonderful job to have. We are left to assume that, for tax reasons, Mr Seeger has to spend most of his time on his yacht in the Mediterranean. Yet Mr Seeger has recently bought a flat in London in the building overlooking St James's Park designed by Sir Denys Lasdun and this is being done up by Patrick Gwynne, another vintage modernist.

Why did Mr Seeger set up the Sutton Place Heritage Trust in the first place and to what extent, and for how long, is he prepared to subsidise what is evidently a nonprofit making enterprise? And what is the financial connexion between the trust, Mr Seeger and the company which bought the whole Sutton Place estate in 1980? All these questions were asked at the opening press conference last year and secured no direct answers.

Perhaps such cynical questions are out of place. Sutton Place has found a new use which is not a drain on public funds; the landscape and grounds are beautiful and the events there will give pleasure to those who can afford them. For the very rich to and munificence is an old, honourable and valuable practice, while in the US, thanks to advantageous tax laws, cultural ventures like the Sutton Place Heritage Trust are common; but it is somewhat rum to find such an expensive and confident combination of old and new in modern England.

who was cautioned "not to play the old retainer night and day". Politicians in a general election campaign live in dread of thunderbolts. The Tories back in 1964 thought that they were sunk by the revelation of an £800m balance of payments deficit (which needless to payments dentit (which recates a say was largely revised away by subsequent recalculations). Harold Wilson blamed his fall in 1970 on a bunch of bought-in jumbo jets which queered the trade returns in mid-campaign. Lord Lundy's grandsire's butler,

In retrospect it seems wildly improbable that any of these unexpected pratialls made much difference to the outcome of the campaigns in which they featured. And so, I suspect, it is this time. True, neither Alec Douglas-Home in 1964, nor Harold Wilson in 1970, nor Ted Heath in 1974 had to undergo the experience of having his principal party organizer amounce in mid-campaign that his campaign committee had just identified him as party leader. But two days before Jim Mortimer's obliging clarifi-cation – and 24 hours before Sunny Jim saw fit to put the boot in – I was told a woeful tale of Labour canvassers in a solid north London constituency having doors slammed in their faces with the cry, "You're nothing but a bunch of Commies!"

What has been rather special about Labour's predicament is that it is entirely of their own devising. Over defence, as over so many other aspects of their policy, they tried to build a bridge of verbiage, in this case between the scrap-all neutralism of their national executive and the reluctance of Denis Healey to face the charge of planning to go "naked into the conference chamb-

The message is this. # Sorry, Hector, you must stay inside

Hector the talking raven of London Zob tried yet again to murder the penguin in the next cage with his long beak, and laughed diabolically. Despite my marathon sponsorship. making him the richest raven in England, he is still displaying the psychopathic traits which had him banished from the Tower of London, where he had happily waged war on American tourists.

Perhaps you should get him a psychiatrist to put him back on the straight and narrow", suggested a friend. Hector doubled up and nearly fell off his perch.

But it was an idea with possibilities. Like former public enemies Jimmy Boyle and John McVicar, a reformed Hector might one day hop free through the gates of Regent's Park and become the subject of a Channel 4 documentary. The new darling of Hampstead intellectuals, he would probably get his own column in a left-wing magazine and dine on steak tartare in the Gay Hussar with former Labour minis-

· So I decided to sound out my old tutor. Dr Uli Weidmann, a dis-tinguished animal behaviourist who now teaches at the University of Leicester's psychology department; the very place that used to mark McVicar's social science essays when he was incarcerated. Hector's problem, thought Uli, could be

"He will be more aggressive at this time of year because of the male hormone flooding the bloodstream", he said. But, according to his keeper, all Hector ever does is talk to his girl friend Doris and nothing else. "Even if he does not actually mate he will still be territorial if people try to interfere with him." added Uh. It seems I have a sexually repressed raven on my hands. "One of my students is doing a thesis at the moment which shows that it is not the strongest mallard drake which gets the mate, it is the most beautiful. The female rates the male on beauty," said Dr Weid-mann. Perhaps Hector should improve his appearance with a bow tie. Ravens have always been conservative dressers. "Hand-reared birds like Hector tend to have no fear, and if they get angry they might attack. A wild bird does not do that it is very unusual for a wild bird to get vicious," added Dr Weidmann who, though he has calmed many a deviant duck, could not offer much hope. At the Hawk Trust, which is also not a curious request", he said. "We had a phone call the other day from a chap worried that his kestrel had changed sex. We were able to reassure him. Personally I think Dr Russell Coope of Birmingham University is your man; he's a bit of a specialist with these birds of prey."

But Dr Coope said: "From what I have heard about Hector he sounds to be incorrigible. Once they have a personality trait like this built in they will never be trustworthy. I should keep well away. You can't hit a bird with a rolled-up newspaper as you would a dog."

Anyone trying to hit Hector with a copy of The Times would become a grim statistic in the next day's paper. Even a broom, his keepers say, is not good protection.

"If you were to punish a raven he would just become more cunning," said Dr Coope. "They are highly intelligent and like to see that their antics are getting a response. I had a jay once who found that if he flew after people they would wave their arms about. If they didn't panic and run away he got bored and left them

"Ravens have great memories. In Hector's case he might have been injured or insulted in some way, and he would remember an injury or insult. They are the brightest of birds, more intelligent than parrots, and love to tease people.

"A raven I knew made a pouch in a perch bound round with sacking and used to take money from people and put it in the pouch. A few like Hector do develop bad habits; one raven I saw used to hammer at ladies' painted toenails when it was fashionable to have shoes with open

"But these are the exception." Dr Coope emphasized. "Ravens have had a bad press through the ages, being regarded as birds of ill omen. The best way to see them is in the wild doing acrobancs. They are one of the few birds to turn upside down just for the joy of it.

"Unfortunately Hector is one of the exceptions and should remain in protective custody." But when I went to see Hector to tell him that he faced a lot more "bird" he just cocked his head on one side like Jack Nicholson in One Flew Over The Cukoo's Nest and said "Hello, I'm Hector," in his most cheerful voice. Bonkers he may. be, but since publicity has brought a steady stream of fans to his cage he is happy as a lark, though he interested in other birds of prey, Mr confides that he would still like his John Richman sympathized. # Did Bernard Levin let Wilson in?

Mike Randall, former editor of the Daily Mail, recalls the column that may have tipped the balance in the 1964 election

It was a few days after the general election of 1964 that I discovered that it is possible to be summarily dismissed and yet retain your job. I was editing the Daily Mail, then under the ownership of the late Lord Rothermere and, as now, solidly on the right in all its opinions. But I was trying to nudge, if not steer, it stealthily towards the centre.

Four months before the election I had agreed with Bernard Levin that he should have a column in the Mail five days a week. It was, of course rather shorter than the pleces that now entertain readers of The Times but it was none the less effective.

Believing that we knew our Rothermere, who was always reluctant to be committed and whose opinions of his newspaper sometimes varied by the day, if not the hour, Bernard and I prepared the ground well. I explained carefully to my proprietor what was contem-plated and why it would be good for the Mail to have a column that would, on occasion, take a view of life unfamiliar to regular readers of our leading article which, in those days, appeared in the first column of the front page.

Bernard wrote four or five specimen columns for Rothermere who agreed, verbally, that we could inflict him on our readers. As was his cautious custom, Rothermere put nothing in writing but Bernard drew up a contract the like of which has probably not been seen in Fleet

"Should any article be in its tenor or views contrary to the known and declared policy of the Daily Mail, this shall not in itself constitute a reason for its not being published, though the Daily Mail shall at all times be free to indicate, in an appropriate manner, that the views expressed by Bernard Levin are his, and are not necessarily or in fact those of the Daily Mail. None the less the editor shall have the right to reject any article in its entirety. It is, however, agreed that this right shall never be exercised capriciously or unreasonably, and its possible exercise will in every such case (if any) be discussed first with Bernard Levin, provided the latter is both available and society, in which connexion Associated Newspapers shall make every effort to get in touch with him and he shall make every effort to become sober if he is

On June 29, 1964, the first Levin column appeared, with this opening paragraph: "These have been vin-tage days for students of lunacy. In Southern Rhodesia an African demonstrator who threw stones at a police dog was promptly shot dead, thus indicating that someone had taken rather too literally Madame Roland's celebrated dictum: The more I see of men, the more I admire dogs'."

Students of the fantastic were also about to gather vintage material.

Came the general election and Bernard asked if he could write four consecutive columns, the first three to be examinations of Tory, Labour and Liberal policies and personalities, the fourth to be published on polling morning and to be a personal explanation of why Bernard Levin would vote Tory/Labour/Liberal.

On the morning of Thursday,

October 15, Bernard duly explained why he would, albeit rejuctantly, vote Labour. He did so in a manner more convincing and in prose more eloquent than the Daily Mail could muster for its customary "Vote Tory" column on the front page.

What was said at Daylesford, Lord Rothermere's Cotswolds home, when he heard the news that Harold Wilson was in with a threeseat majority I have not yet discovered, but his reaction was immediate and drastic.

It was the custom that anyone visiting Rothermere for the weekend should report to his London secretary and collect whatever letters, publications or packages were awaited at Daylesford. That post-election weekend, Bob Hammond, then managing director of Associated Newspapers, spotted among the envelopes one, as he told me later, with familiar handwriting. He did not read to whom it was addressed but thought it must be important and placed it on top of

Arriving at Daylesford before lunch on the Saturday and finding. not unusually, that his host was out with the dogs, Hammond dumped his deliveries on a sitting room table and waited. picked up the envelope, looked at it and strode back to Hammond saying: "This is for you," and left the Hammond opened the letter which was, indeed, addressed to him in Rothermere's handwriting. It

The letter said: Dear H. For the first time in the history of Associated News-papers a member of the editorial staff has given his political opinions in the columns of the Daily Mail without the consent or even the knowledge of the proprietor: Such an event is intolerable and demands the resignation of everyone concerned in the matter. I would remind you that when I saw the editor of the Daily Mall in the Board room in your presence I told him that the Daily Mail had to support the Tories not only in the leading article but also throughout the newspaper. My instructions have been flouted and I am not prepared to tolerate such action. Yours sincerely,

By the time Hammond had digested the letter and decided on a policy of silence, Rothermere returned and the two sat down to lunch. No mention of the letter was made during the meal. Nor was the matter raised until the next evening. shortly before Hammond was due to drive back to London. As he was about to take his leave he said to Rothermere: "That letter. Shall I deal with it in my way?" "Yes," said Rothermere - and that was all he said. Hammond's way was to send for me and tell me not to do it again. We can only guess at Rothermere's motive for the letter. His instructions had not included, and could not include, a columnist who had the right to express his own opinions. Possibly somebody had convinced Rothermere that, but for Bernard Levin and the Mail, Harold Wilson would not have scraped through to No 10. Surviving the incident, I felt more secure in the editorial chair. How wrong I was is another story. The author was editor of the Daily

THIS LEARNING BUSINESS

No British Secretary of State unrestricted tenure and expense could conceivably face the kind ive autarchy which still of spectacle recently presented to M Alain Savary, the reforming education minister in the Mitterrand government. There is in our institutions of higher education. ("unrivalled" is the qualifying adjective in the Conservative Party's manifesto) a solidity among both staff and students that will always deflect the passions which produced the latest events in Paris and provincial French cities. Yet a concomitant of British academic quietude is a disappointing passivism: why have not dons and students been more angry as, over the past three years, both government and University Grants Committee have pursued a policy of not entirely justifiable cuts in spending and student numbers?

There has been a stoic acceptance of higher education policy as given by ministers and a Department of Education and Science whose senior men are still by no means convinced that all the academic "fat" has been stripped away. This attitude goes hand in hand with a dismaying conservatism - for example, about the shape of degree courses, the length of long vacations, the amateurism of academic management - shared by staff, students and the employers who give them jobs on the strength of their degrees.

Aspects of the universities' conservatism are of course valuable: They exist in part to conserve and transmit knowledge. It is to their credit that during the period of great expansion after Lord Robbins's report they were able to sustain high standards and pass them to the newly-created institutions. But in another sense they were too conservative, expanding without breaking from the old framework of three-year honours degrees, fully grant-aided students, unmethodical research.

prevents universities barely miles apart from cooperating over libraries and joint courses. As generations of well-educated Scots will testify there is no Godgiven virtue in highly-specialized three-year honours degrees.

On the campuses there is all too evident an attitude akin to that of the ninth-century clerics who withdrew to the monasteries to keep the flames of scholarship alight during the dark ages - as now symbolized by spending cuts and an unsympathetic government. In fact responsible ministers, Sir Keith Joseph himself, and Mr William Waldegrave, have indicated that after the financial turmoil there must now be a period of stability; the Prime Minister, an enthusiast for scientific research, might yet be prevailed on to agree that the nation's research and development capacity depends on the general health of the universities and polytechnics. But the corollary of some stability in university financing must not be stasis but change in tenure arrangements, in retirements, in faculty organization, in the division between teaching and research, in the inflow of "new blood" in the disciplines.

What is needed is not some rewrite of Lord Robbins's report of twenty years ago, but a sequence of experiments - what university will have the courage to respond to Sir Keith's recent imaginative proposal for an experiment in university budgeting? The great merit of the final report of the Leverhulme programme of study into the future of higher education, published yesterday lies in its tentativeness. It proposes certain changes in the rules of the game (for example on tenure where it wisely says the existing employment protection rules would form a strong barrier against intellectual persecution) and invites response to a set of

From Lord Harris of High Cross proposals, to be adopted in part or by individual institutions,

This is altogether a praiseworthy effort, paid for by Leverhulme money and conducted by Professor Gareth Williams of Lancaster University with commendable awareness of the boundary between higher education and the economy. The contribution of such men as Sir Adrian Cadbury is worthwhile for its own sake and also to scotch any suggestion that cor-porate Britain can afford not to care about what goes on in the colleges. Leverhulme's suggestions are many, and will repay study by the new men coming in at the head of the UGC and the DES as well as those ministers taking up their seals after June 10th. The headlines have been captured by the proposal for a two-year degree course plus a two-year limit on student grants, but as important are the report's emphases on professionalizing university management, separating budgets for teaching and research and creating some academic body external to the universities to monitor standards and academic competence. The latter proposal has a bureaucratic ring about it, but must appeal to anyone who has ever picked up the compendium of research in the social sciences. The Leverhulme report rejoices in the diversity of universities and colleges and even in the sometimes uncomfortable overlap between the universities and the polytechnics. It is thus no document for a British Alain Savary (next Thursday looks unlikely to produce any candidate for the role). It speaks instead to those academics who might be tempted to retreat into their specialisms for the duration: its remedy for excessive specialization by undergraduates deserves consideration by all who are concerned by the course of economic life for the rest of this decade and into the 1990s.

Iragi territory. There may be no direct connexion between the two events. The militants condemned in Diyarbakir belonged to the Kurdish Workers' Party (PKK), a group seeking to set up an independent Kurdish state in what is now eastern Turkey. Those who were pursued into iraq could also be Turkish citizens but could equally well be members of one or other of the Iraqi Kurdish groups who are fighting for autonomy against the Baghdad regime, but often also fighting each other. Such inter-Kurdish fights have been known to spill over into Turkey mormation impossible to say. They could have been involved in arms smuggling, or just about any other sort of smuggling, and the soldiers might have been pursuing them across the frontier. Alternatively they might have been pursuing their local enemies across the frontier and the Turkish troops might have got in the crossfire. Or they might not have been Iraqi Kurds at all, but Turkish Kurds trying to take refuge in Iraq.

Whatever the background, the use of Turkish troops on such a scale in cross-border operations must be embarrassing for the Iraqi government. At very least it draws attention to the inability of that government to assert its own authority in the mountainous regions of Iraqi Kurdistan. worst, it will reawaken old irredentist passions on the Turkish side, and corresponding fears on the Iraqi side, with a mixture of hopes and fears among the Kurds.

Neither Turks nor Kurds have forgotten, or ever fully accepted, the incorporation into Iraq of the Ottoman province of Mosul, before. The Turkish government whose population was predomi-understandably does not like nantly Kurdish with a large Turkish-speaking minority, by an act of British imperial power. The Turks argue that under the terms of their National Pact it should have been part of Turkey.

Last year an article in the New Statesman, alleging the existence of a Turco-American plot to seize northern Iraq, aroused great interest and anxiety in the Arab world. Such a notion seems extremely far-fetched, given the amicable cooperation existing between the Turkish and Iraqi governments, and it is most unlikely that what happened this week has anything to do with such a plan. But it does remind us that some hitherto unthinkable things might become thinkable in the event of a complete collapse of central government in Iraq.

A reunited Kurdistan certainly comes into the category of the unthinkable for the moment, and an independent one even more so. In Turkey the authorities have set their face not only against independence but against any form of autonomy and even against the Kurdish language, the use of which in public has become a finable offence. To discourage separatism is one thing. To deny the national aspiration of eight million people is another. It can be done for a time by force so long as the population is backward, ignorant and tribal. It cannot be done indefinitely in a country which aspires to be seen as a European democracy.

It is unlikely to produce a "stable" central America of viable client states, and may therefore involve the United States in prolonged and costly distractions in a region where its genuine strategic interests could be better protected by other lines of policy.

The United States deployed 200 ships to blockade Cuba in 1962, it would be better now not to raise the stakes as it was then, but to limit the damage before that stage is reached. One of the difficulties about achieving a reduction in tension is that much of the American debate about Central America is now not so much about Central America, but more about the domestic party struggle and considerations of global prestige in the context of the East-West argument.

Nobody wants to send combat troops, a consensus that makes current policy the more underhand. The Administration appears to seek total victory using a variety of surrogates and diplomatically going it alone. Failing that, it wishes to put the blame on Congress. It is unlikely to succeed with either aim.

High wages and unemployment

Sir, Mr Peter Shore looked unusually pleased with himself on television for proving that high wages could have nothing to do with unemployment. His "proof" was to say that if low wages helped then African and Asian workers would be fully Employed.

But even the most shadowy of shadow chancellors should be able to grasp that wage comparisons can be sensibly made only in terms of cost per unit of output. If trade unions had not spent decades keeping output down, British wages could be higher without pricing our workers out of employment.

Anyway, how does Mr Shore square his view with the Labour manifesto which promises "employ-ment subsidies to firms linked to agreements with them to preserve and create jobs." Why would employers be needing subsidies if labour costs per unit of output were not too high?

The unbearable truth is that almost everything British trade union leaders have done has helped to inflate labour costs and so to depress employment prospects.

Having spent half their time restricting efficiency, they have devoted the other half to forcing up labour costs. This they have done directly through unrealistic wage demands, and indirectly by pressing for socialist policies that have burdened employers with non-wage costs, including rates, taxes and other costs of complying with multiplying statutory obligations.

Having willed the means, they cannot now escape blame for the resulting unemployment. Since the Low Pay Unit is no more than a trade union front, we should not be surprised it is playing the same game. But so long as it insists on jobs, we should think of it as the No Pay Unit.

Yours faithfully RALPH HARRIS, General Director. Institute of Economic Affairs, 2 Lord North Street, Westminster, SW1. May 25.

A change of tune

From Mr Martin Knapp Sir, Can there be anything more incongruous than the singing of "Abide with me" before a Cup Final? There must be many for whom the words of this splendid hymn bring a very special message of comfort and strengthened faith. They must find it almost blasphemous that what is part of their religious experience immediately precedes the bawling of a football crowd and has become an integral part of the annual ritual.

The singers, I suspect, are happy to bathe together in a warm sea of popular sentimental Victorian bal-lads be just as effective, just as relevant and run no risk of offending those who regard the verses of H. F. Lyte with some degree of reverence? Yours sincerely, MARTIN KNAPP.

Liberal food policy

From Mr W. A. N. Jones Sir, Mr David Steel is certainly right to raise the question of the cost of the British shopping basket but he is unlikely to reduce the cost of food to the British consumer. The Liberal Party, regretiably, has abandoned its historic commitment to the principle that taxes should not be levied on food imported into Britain.

Under the Common Agricultural Policy of the EEC heavy import duties are levied on many foodstuffs and the importation of some foods and the importance of some loods is virtually prohibited (cheese from New Zealand, for example). The EEC levy on wheat imports doubles the price of the wheat consumed in Britain. We are back in the old days of the pre-Cobden corn laws with a

The CAP is a major factor in forcing up the cost of living to consumers everywhere in Britain and the EEC. It greatly reduces our ability to produce goods at competitive prices. It is a direct cause of much of the present high unemployment. It is a major handicap to any British government trying to solve the problems of the 1980s. Yours faithfully, NEWTON JONES, Chairman W. H. Jones and Co (London) Ltd. Tower House, 17 Oakleigh Park North, Whetstone, N20.

Reporting Lebanon war

From Mr Gai Eaton Sir, You have come in for some flak

on account of your recent leader "Friends beyond the need," (May 19)) and, with becoming modesty, seem to have refrained from publishing the letters of approval which you must surely have received. The voice of British Jewry had been heard, loud and clear, but I believe it is time to take to note of the fact that there are between three and four times as many Muslims in this country as there are Jews.

The Muslims are no less sensitive to criticism and certainly feel no less strongly on this issue. If their views seldom find expression in your correspondence columns this is, I suspect, largely due to the fact that they have not yet learned to express their anger in the urbane and superficially "moderate" tone required.

Nevertheless, Muslims and Jews have to live together in this country, and the anger and sense of injustice which I see building up in the Muslim community on account of the over-representative of Jewish opinion in the press does not augur well for the future. The mildest criticism of Israel provokes a President

Calke Abbey's future

From Mr A. M. Alexander

Sir, I have read with interest your article (May 23) in relation to the difficulties surrounding the offer to the Nation of Calke Abbey which you have published under the headline "Funds threat to historic homes"

Being involved in the negotiations with the various government departments in connexion with this offer I am bound to say that the difficulties which may emerge seem to be, not so much the availability of public funds to enable this property to be banded over to the nation, but the question of the actual will of the Government to have the property taken into public ownership. As your reporter made clear, Calke Abbey, its contents and sufficient agricultural land to provide an lequate endowment fund were offered by the trustees in lien of tax. The Government indicated that whilst it would be prepared to accept the Abbey and its contents in lieu of tax, they could not accept the endowment fund. This despite the fact that, but for technical reasons because the property is held in trust, the deceased both before and after his death could have put the endowment fund into a maintenance fund - which has been actively ments since 1976 - and achieved total tax exemption on his death. Effectively, therefore, by accept-our heritage, which it was confidently believed was the like aim of the Government. Unless there is a change of heart, the result in this particular case, and no doubt in others in the future, must be the break up of collections of particular importance in the context of our history, and the export of our greatest treasures.

If the Government is really serious about its wish to preserve the heritage, with Calke Abbey they have an opportunity, at no cost to themselves, to give a token of good faith of their intentions. Yours faithfully.

A brother's death

From Lady Willoughby de Eresby Sir, May I seek the hospitality of your columns to deal with a matter of private concern but also, your readers may agree, of some public COBCETTL.

On the night of Monday, August 19, 1963 my brother Timothy, aged 27, drowned in the Mediterranean. He and a friend had planned to cross from Cap d'Antibes to Calvi by moonlight and they arrived in the South of France on the 18th. The Mistral which was blowing subsided and, ignoring repeated warnings that it could recommence, they left on the evening of the 19th in a small Chriscraft quite unsuited to rough seas and were never seen or heard of

Manifestos and electoral law world with commodity price stabili-

From Mr Charles Rowlatt

Sir, A paradox has emerged in this election. The undecided voters want to read the Party manifestos, but are obstructed by the electoral laws.

These booklets cost a significant sum to produce. Lawyers advise that if distributed by constituency par-ties, their value should be included in the election expenses of the local candidate. These expenses are limited by statute to a level that would allow only one manifesto for every seven voters (at a unit cost of 50p in a metropolitan constituency of 60,000) and no other campaign expense would be allowed. There could be no posters, no pamphlets. no halls. In effect, candidates are prevented from presenting their detailed platform to the electorate. Central parties, with no limit to their expenses, are reduced to selling the manifesto direct to voters, or resorting to the vagaries of commer-cial outlets. The first requires massive resources, and the second is prope to bias.

Yours faithfully. CHARLES ROWLATT. 0 Hampstead Hill Gardens, NW3.

Election issues in NI

From Mr Enoch Powell, Official Unionist Party candidate for South Down

Sir, In your "John Bull's Other Election" (Leader, May 25) you complain that the election here will not be fought under the same party labels on the same party issues as on the mainland. That is not our fault. As long as the actions of Government and Parliament continue to cast doubt upon our future status as part of this Kingdom, the question of the Union itself has to take precedence over all others.

Devolution and SNP

From Mr G. A. Fisher

Sir, Lord Home of the Hirsel really should try to remember the facts (your report, May 26)! Particularly is this true when the facts, as on the previous occasion of Canon Collins (letters, May 9, 14 and 18) are about himself.

It was Lord Home himself, in February 1979, who intervened in the referendum debate to say that Scots should vote "No" because the Tories, he promised, would bring in a better Bill when returned to power. True, the Scots rejected his advice and 52 per cent of the votes cast were in favour, this failed to bring devolution because of the remarkable 40 per cent rule (which had been rejected by a majority of Scottish MPs).

But to say four years later, with no devolution Bill from Lord Home's friends to carry out his promise, that devolution cannot happen while the SNP has independence in its policy; these are weasel words. The SNP has always had independence as its main policy, and it was so in February, 1979. That didn't stop Lord Home promising a better devolution Bill then, and it forms a totally inadequate excuse now for a broken

Tied in knots? From Mr J. M. Dutton

Sir, Sir Charles Mott-Radclyffe suggests today (May 25) that Lord Irwin was wearing a wrong tie in Gandhi. Contrariwise, another Viceroy portrayed in the film appeared to be correctly dressed in this respect. Lord Chelmsford (as he later became), who was the Viceroy at the time of the Jallianwalla Bagh massacre, was indeed an Old Wykehamist; it was just bad luck that the particular pattern of the tie which he sported was not introduced until the 1950s. had presented an election petition arising out of the election of Mr Adrian Slade, who was the Liberal candidate, in the Greater London Council election at Richmond-tupon-Thames in May 1981.

The petitioners alleged that the return and declaration of election expenses made on Mr Slade's behalf were untrue, and they further alleged overspending under 13 heads. The allegations relating to the expense returns were upheld but the petitioners succeeded in proving only one head of overspending.

The Commissioner on March 23, 1982, after a 13-day hearing, awarded the petitioners three-quarters of their costs so far as they were properly incurred, to be taxed if not agreed. The petitioners lodged their bill of costs, which totalled £42,000.

Mr Slade's solicitors applied to adjourn the taxation on the ground that the order meant that the bill of costs should have been drawn so as to distinguish between costs in the cost incurred in the costs incurred in relation to the whole petition.

How to book a holiday

have become a national institution, a national right, and almost a national religion, we expect too much of them. We start planning them in January, gloating over the polystyrene prose in the travel supplements.

The annual expedition to Corfu, or Devon, or Benidorm, is going to change everything, bring new romance and zing into our lives, make us new people. In fact what it usually does is give us sunburn, heartburn, hangover, taedium vitae, and some blurred snapshots of bodies on a beach as proof to somebody (ourselves?) that we really had a smashing time on holiday. (Parenthesis: somebody ought to write a monograph on the lunacy of holiday photography. If it is pretty pictures that you want, the highly coloured local postcards are always better. But what we want is pictures of ourselves to prove that we have performed the annual rite of passage to nowhere successfully

This is not a new thought, though the zeal for holidays is more fanatical than it has ever been. Voltaire defined holidays in his Philosophical Dictionary as: "Certain days set apart by the church to be spent in holy idleness, which is favourable to piety". The safest way of passing such days is to sit and yawn your head off. As in so many others of the little disturbances of life, the cure for holiday boredom is reading. They say that holidays are the proaches to the matter. One school of book-worms holds that one should read something completely different from what one reads for the rest of the year. For example, the clergyman should take thud-and-blunder thrillers, the politician moral philosophy, the journalist poetry (the Metaphysicals, I think), the barassed housewife with small children the Bhagavad Gita, the banker highly coloured historical ro-mances. We might call this approach to holiday reading the Lycidas school; tomorrow to fresh books and authors new. Its most conspicuous exponent is my friend Erich Segal, who during the working year is a professional classicist specializing in ancient comedy, particularly Plantus, and on holiday reads, and indeed writes, romances such as Love Story. Another approach to holiday reading is the self-improvement or Emile Coué sect: every holiday in every way I read something that is going to make me a better and a wiser person. Such a holiday reader sets himself or herself some great literary or intellectual project. This summer I am going to read the Iliad of Homer in three days, or get to grips with the stand Einstein, or find out avalanche of new books. It is whether there is anything other sometimes tempting to say that than flatulent jargon in sociology. I dare say that this instinct derives from childhood memories of holiday tasks. Dear R.C.M. replied, with the refined elitism of Plato: "The boys can read all that in the holidays." The spirit was willing, but the flesh was weak. # At home in the country of Agatha Christie

First published in 1911, Small Country Houses of Today, edited by Lawrence Weaver (Antique Collectors' Club. £17.50) takes you straight to the heart of Agatha Christic Land. Or that is the immediate impression. These surely are the very residences of her prosperous and not very imaginative middle class - the Colonel, the Bank Manager, the Retired Indian Civil Servant, the Doctor, the Imaginary Invalid, the Widow with a Past.

One house is singled out as having a "man's room" (not tation in unsuitable circumwhat Americans call a "men's stances of forms admired in room") for callers one wouldn't wish to admit to the rest of the higgledy-piggledy combination house – just the place for seeing of a number of unlikely creditors, revenants and blackmailers. There is even a touch house!" of Tony Perelli, Edgar Wallace's Emel music-loving gangster in On the Spot, about the Birmingham villa specially designed to accommodate an amateur organist.

Emerging from Agatha Christie Land we come upon some real houses, and it is reassuring to find that Weaver, too, has his reservations.

They are not, however, the kind of houses Poirot cared for. Comfortable? No doubt. But the most trivial and the most self-assertive design.

Not for them the unpretentious but satisfying simplicity such complacent clients or were of, say, an early eighteenth-century farmhouse (roughly the know a large house in Buckingsame size as many of these hamshire built in 1901 for a particular Edwardian confections), agreeable even when was particularly fond of a taken from a pattern book, as certain hill, and caused the most of them probably were.

The Edwardian purchaser seems to have had good value for his money. The house with the "man's room" mentioned above also contained three sitting rooms and five bedrooms and cost less than £2,000. Compare these prices with the £56,000 that may be asked and obtained today for one of a row of 20year-old bungalows that seemed to me expensive at their original prices of under £4,000. Yet in the 1930s money would oc-casionally go farther than before the First World War.

> Early in the decade friends of mine, seeking to economize, sold their much-loved family home, but found instead a tolerable substitute in Norfolk. This consisted of a striking Georgian Gothic "cottage" with three or four sitting rooms. 10 bedrooms, stables and lodge, together with 20 acres of parkland for... £3,000. # Soothing face of a savage thriller

Crime writing has two faces. Or rather backsides. There are the spreading hips of the cosy, and there are the lean buttocks of the hunter. An example of the cosy is Puppet for A Corpse by Dorothy Simpson (Michael Joseph, £7.95), a whodunit in the fine tradition of the puzzle game, if with more of real human dilemmas in it than, say, most of Agatha Christic.

William Mcllvanney's The Papers of Tony Veitch (Flodder & Stoughton, £7.95) takes us to the underworld of Glasgow where rumours of a fine haul to be made effectively stir the murk and bring into thoughtful action once again the eponymons detective of his first strength of the attraction of the

It says something about Glasgow (and, incidentally, it exemplifies McIlvanney's skill in transliterating the patois) but isn't it a tiny bit of a frauditself? Or is it? Books furnish a holiday. That last job round the bookshoos can be almost as important as buying the travel tickets. Should holiday reading be dignified by deep thoughts or gingered up by riotous farce? Perhaps both.

To start with, among the new paperbacks, there is Tom Sharpe again. His Vintage Stuff (Pan, £1.75) features some dreadful schoolmasters in a proposterous (but not quite incredible) minimal public school which prides itself on its "Assault Course for Overactive Underachievers" which is just about what the teachers and pupils are. NORTHAMPTON EVENING TELEGRAPH

Rod, wine and fishcakes, up in castle country

Striding across a grouse moor, kicking up few birds though there are plenty of their catkin droppings in the heather, is a fine way to dispatch city cobwebs. No grander though than standing in the sparkling Tweed, cars and neck well-scarfed against the fishing equivalent of an own-goal from an inexpertly cast fly.

If invitations for weekends in Scotland are scarce just now, I know of a duke who will be happy to put you up for a consideration at one of his country places

Three miles upstream of the junction of the Tweed and Teviot rivers is Sunlaws, a country house on the Duke of Roxburghe's estate. Last year the Duke and Duchess turned it into a hotel of which they are the proprietors. Wine and fishcakes from the big house, Floors Castle, add colour to the gustatory proceedings, and hotel guests have free admission to the castle during its open season (May 2 to September 30). When I stayed at Sunlaws not long after it opened the furnishings were unscuffed, catalogue bright, and the service on tiptoe. All should mellow well, as should the planting in the huge conservatory where, prudently so far north, tea is taken. Allan and Frances Hobkirk (he is everywhere and she cooks nice, slightly old fashioned food) run Sunlaws with a sure hand, and the local help is shy and pleasant.

The house has its own beat on the Teviot for salmon (February 1 to November 30), and trout (April 1 to September 30), and driven pheasant days eye of Ted Hunter of Angler's can be arranged on the Rox-January 31).

I cycled round the country lanes on one of the sturdy bikes issued by Scottish Cycling Holidays and turned cold on a sunny afternoon at the macabre sight of 160 moles hung up to dry on a barbed wire farm fence. That was just the biggest catch, there were several others, and rooks too hung up in trees as an awful warning to others.

A painting by William Wilson in 1809 shows the rectangular Georgian original before William Playfair's extravagantly conceived alterations and additions transformed it into the flambovant castle that bird-room, full of stuffed birds in various states of repair, is immensely stylish, and the catalogue of paintings, furniture and objects worth a second glance is long.

Do stop to admire the view of the Tweed from the windows, and if the damp rising on one or two silk curtains is a puzzle resist a polite inquiry about the castle's maintenance problems. One of her ladyship's dogs has not yet heard of Barbara Woodhouse.

Dry spell and a long ladder

But the two big differences between painting indoors and out are that you have to cope with the weather, and you need to scale greater heights.

The drawbacks of bad weather are obvious: you cannot apply paint to a surface on which rain is beating down. But sun can be almost as big an enemy of new paint as rain Heat, playing on paint before it has set, will encourage blisters. The perfect weather would, in fact, be a long, dry, cloudy spell, coming at the end of a heatwave, and with no wind. The heatwave would have dried everything out, so that your new paint would not be sealing-in moisture, especially on wood-work; and the absence of wind would mean no dust being olown on to wet paint.

Never put paint on surfaces that are wet, or in direct sunlight. Professional painters have the same motto as holiday makers - "follow the sun". Wherever they can, they like to start work in the east wall of a house, once the sun has moved wall. That way they are always working in shade, and on surfaces that the sun has dried

For access you need a ladder, or a scaffold tower. Both can be hired (see your local Yellow Pages), but a ladder is a useful thing to have, so purchase should by considered. Expect to pay up to £50 for a strong, easyo-carry aluminium one, tall enough for a two-storey house.

Hiring a ladder with "standoffs" (they hold it clear from a gutter, so you can paint it) costs shout £5 a week. Make sure your ladder is safe.

The it securely - at the bottom to stakes driven into the ground, at the top to stout hooks screwed into the fascia board. To raise a ladder from the horizontal, lay it flat on the ground, and get a helper to stand at one end, with a foot on the last rung. Go to the other end, hoist the ladder above your head, then walk towards your helper, raising it as you go. Carry a ladder upright, not extended, locked against your body.

When you climb a ladder

when you climb a ladder hold the stiles not the rungs. Wear stout shoes and a decorator's apron, with large kangaroo-style pockets for brushes and other tools. Suspend the paint can from the rungs by a hook.

Tantalizing tipples How tantalizing is your tantalus? These sets of decanters

in lockable wooden containers originated in the mid-1800s and were much used by service people destined for India where they suspected, rightly or wrongly, that the servants were less honest than those at home.
If your problem is not whether the butler takes your tipple but that you are unable to display your selection of amber liquids properly because your tantalus has a missing decanter or broken hinge you should know about Piers Hart and his team of seven craftsmen who specialize in tantalus repairs. They make new locks, re-silver fittings, repolish woodwork and can arrange to have a crystal decanter cut to match the originals. A basic re-fit costs about £55, a can send your tantalus by post (packed very carefully) for an estimate. Details from Piers Hart, New Zealand Cottages, Barnham, Thetford, Norfolk (0842 89 212).

By coincidence the highly successful concert performance of Pouchielli's La Gioconda at the Barbican last month shares Cappuccilli. Or is it coincidence? Domingo is the obvious first casting for a Verdi opera even when the tenor role is as slight as it is in Nabucco. Dimitrova has made a Concorde-like ascent through the thin ranks of dramatic sopranos, although she is yet to be heard at Covent Garden.

It would not be easy to improve on that casting. But DG have a bonus; it comes in the shape of Giuseppe Sinopoli-making his opera debut on record. Mightily impressive it is, too. Despite the power and experience of his forces Sinopoli takes command at once. He has clear relish for the energy and rawness of Verdi's third opera and first success. The score is an odd mixture of arias which are virtually frozen in time and those choruses, flavoured with risorgimento-style patriotism. which surge forward and were to become one of Verdi's trademarks.

Anyone accusing Nabucco of and malign brother of Carlo coarseness should listen to the respectively. beginning of Part II, L'empio (The Unbeliever). Dimitrova are specially worth noting this floats the notes of Abigail's aria, "Anch'io dischiuso", like to the bloodthirsty cabaletta that follows. Cappuccilli has the thread of melancholy in his voice which the best Verdi baritones require and his account of the title role shows him throughout on peak form.

Evgeny Nesterenko is no less powerful as the High Priest, Zaccaria. It is not usual to put Domingo last among the principals but Ismaele is an unrewarding part and DG did well the same vocal spearhead as Verdi's Nabucco newly released from DG: Placido Domingo, Ghena Dimitrova and Piero Ghena Dimitrova and Piero and in every way this is an outstanding set.

The first issue here selects itself. Boulez's Pli selon pli is one of the few works of musical magnificence created in our time, and the opportunity to hear it conducted by composer is not to be missed. It is a very various composition, but one that powerfully conveys its own world of sound and feeling an intoxicating world of long erotic lines for the solo

Here we are concerned with Boulez's second or perhaps third thoughts on his masterpiece. He composed it between 1957 and 1962, then recorded it in 1969 with the Polish soprano Halina Lukomska and the BBC Symphony Orchestra. The new recording, made after performances in London and Paris in 1981, shows again the resilience and beauty the BBC SO bring to this score, and does so rather more clearly than before, though Boulez's metal instrumentation is prone to distortion. The new soprano is Phyllis Bryn-Julson, who allows the work to flower more naturally than Miss Lukomska preferred she discovers the line, where her predecessor had tended to fling it out, and the sense of hovering in each beautiful moment is exactly right here.

Also of interest is the change soprano and vibrant splashes in Boulez's approach, which is writing Pli selon pli Shostako-from an orchestra weighted partly mirrored in the change of vich was engaged on his Twelfth towards the pitched percuss- soloist. Pli selon pli is now a Symphony in D minor. to be taken seriously. Disappointingly Erato have given over a quarter of it to reissuing an aged recording of the orchestral Nomos gamma, a mechanical dinosaur of texture music, but the other two works are both more recent and more interesting. Cendrées (1974) is a massive crowd scene, for chorus and orchestra that swirls and at times thins to leave an abstractly gesticulating vocal or instrumental soloist. Jonchaies (1977) is a colossal orchestral picture painted with screeching regular

Swaying closer to Mozart's heart

Mozart: Symphonies Vol 6: Nos 31 (two versions), 35, 38, 39, 40 (first version), 41. Academy of Ancient Music/Jaap Schröder, Christopher Hogwood, Oiseau-Lyre Florilegium digital D17204 (four records) Mozart, Symphonies Vol 7: 1767-8, Nos 37 & 40 (second version). Academy of Ancient Music/Jaan Schröder, Christopher Hogwood. Oiseau-Lyre Florilegium digital Di 73D3 (three records) Mozart: Symphonies Nos 31 & 33. Concertgebouw Orchestra /Nikolaus Harnoncourt. Telefunken digital 6.42817 AZ Mozart Symphony No 41 "Jupiter". Concertgebouw Orchestra/Nikolaus Harnoncourt. Telefunken digital 6.42846 AZ

It all seemed so simple. Takethe skills of the players who over the past decade or so have recreated the sound of baroque music on period instruments, push them forward a little in time, and set them to record all the Mozart symphonies. And there is "Mozart in the original", a landmark in the history of the gramophone.

If the results have not been quite as satisfactory as that, it is scarcely a matter for surprise. The initial releases in the Academy of Ancient Music's series were indeed a revelation. but as the Mozart symphony cycle progressed very fast it became clear that many works were being recorded without a great deal of thought about their special problems or character: every detail of the appropriate forces and even layout had been thoroughly considered in Neal Zaslaw's research, but the musical results were sometimes scrappy and under-characterized. The main problems have concerned not the fast movements, which zipped along with enormous verve and energy. marred only by a hint of rhythmic predictability, but the slow movements. Here it sounded as if Schröder and Hogwood, while concerned to break the accepted conventions of long legato lines and smoothly sustained lines, had found little that was eloquent or rhetorical to put in their place. Now the final two volumes in the series have appeared, and it is a pleasure to report that in many respects the playing has matured immensely. Among the final group of great symphonies, some have been completely rethought: the opening of No 39, with its baroquestyle dotted rhythms, crisp timpani and cascading scales in the strings, is splendidly done, as is the lilting triple-time Allegro which follows, with its woody flutes and clarinets. It would be difficult to find an orchestral texture more sheerly exciting than that of the "Haffner's" blazing D major first movement, with its crescendos vigorously controlled.

Nevertheless, there is a recurrent dissatisfaction that the music has not been ponrehearsed closely enough. A sublime slow movement such as that of No 40 simply happens, Hilary inch and rather scrappily at that.

while in neither of the two versions in these two boxes (one with clarinets, the other with-out) does the first movement sound anything but facile. though it is scrupulously neat. The Paris, a light, extrovert work, fares well, with skating violing in the finale and gently plaugent lines in both the slow movements of the two versions.

I am not pleading for a more overtly expressive approach: indeed, these performances are best when they are most different from conventional sweet accounts of Mozart and most worrying when they charge through the fast move-ments of the "Jupiter" like the English Chamber Orchestra on a bad day.

There could scarcely be a more striking challenge to the Schröder/Hogwood approach than that represented by Niko-laus Harnoncourt's recent Mozart recordings, for he too is a pioneer with period instru-ments. But here he has chosen to work with a superbly skilful modern orchestra, the Concert-gebouw, and to transform their playing out of all recognition. Everything Harmoncourt does is stimulating, and much of it is infuriating. There is never a sense of chugging through the music indeed, in the first movement of the "Jupiter" he heads are the music integral of the "Jupiter" he heads are the music integral. breaks up the music with pauses, rubati and accents which seem disconcerting, even stupid - but then at a climax like the fortissimo A flat chord which follows a bar's rest. he blasts home the true force of the music with staggering power. Harnoncourt's slow movethough that of the "Jupiter" has an aura of ineffable mystery about it, which is more than can be said for the Academy's. Some ideas in the "Paris" symphony quite misfire, as does the minuet of the "Jupiter". I was at first unconvinced by the hushed, smooth, start of the "Jupiter" finale, but the sense of progressive tension and excitement is irresistible, and when Harnoncourt unleashes triumphant horns and then brittle. noisy timpani in the contrapuntal coda, the listener is caught up in the sheer glory of coin collectors are no different.

All collectors wish upon them-selves a little immortality, and

As famous collections are sold there is pleasure in obtaining one or two coins from them, or in finding pieces, in dealers' stock or in auction sales, that come from the famous collections of earlier generations. Yet

Grosvenor confounds by caprice

The Grosvenor coup is a comparatively new addition to described in a satirical article in an American magazine in 1976. Here are one or two examples of the mythical Mr Grosvenor's himsical diversions.

J764 M 2 W E l s

Declarer, because of the bidding, has placed East with length in this suit. With the idea of felling a singleton 9 or 10 in the West hand, which is mathematically twice as prob-able as a singleton queen, declarer plays the knave from dummy. Grosvenor unemotionally contributes the 10. Nat-urally concluding that his original plan is doomed, declarer decides to play for the drop. Again, Grosvenor is East. with the trump suit distributed as follows:

Declarer plays the ace and Grosvenor follows with the king. Obviously declarer finesses dummy's 10, losing to Grosvenor's knave.

Although nothing is lost, nothing is gained by these manoeuvres. So what is the point of them? Grosvenor claimed that the psychological effect on his opponents was such that they immediately bid played in an irrational manner because of a natural sense of outrage.

The question arises, can a Grosvenor ever show a profit? Look at this hand from high stake rubber bridge. North-South Game + 60. Dealer South.

East, recognizing that the only hope was to evoke some imaginary spectre, dropped-the VK! A ruse which could have succeeded against a good player. But this South treated the play with the disdain of a tank running over a bramble bush. Not only did he play another heart, he had the gall to finesse the 10. When the trumps broke, he lost only a spade. "Don't worry about missing slam; lad", he consoled his partner, "t'was better to take had presented an election petition arising out of the election of Mr Adrian Slade, who was the Liberal candidate, in the Greater London Council election at Richmond-tupon-Thames in May 1981.

The petitioners alleged that the return and declaration of election expenses made on Mr Slade's behalf were untrue, and they further alleged overspending under 13 heads. The allegations relating to the expense returns were upheld but the petitioners succeeded in proving only one head of overspending.

The Commissioner on March 23, 1982, after a 13-day hearing, awarded the petitioners three-quarters of their costs so far as they were properly incurred, to be taxed if not agreed. The petitioners lodged their bill of costs, which totalled £42,000.

Mr Slade's solicitors applied to adjourn the taxation on the ground that the order meant that the bill of costs should have been drawn so as to distinguish between costs in the cost incurred in the costs incurred in relation to the whole petition.

The Tilling bid laid bare

Tilling (not to mention those in BTR) must be getting thoroughly confused by now on the BTR bid for Tilling.

City Comment

The story so far goes back a dawn raid on Tilling shares by BTR early last month, followed by a full bid - then valued at £576m in shares, or £538m on the 185p a share cash alternative. Before speculation broke out Tilling's shares were 123p after a disappointing year.

Condensing the arguments for reasons of space, Tilling cried "rape!". accusing BTR of wanting to strip off its valuable assets.

BTR said. "Nonsense. we can manage them better. That's all." Early on in the piece Lord Cockfield, the trade secretary, took the amazing decision of not sending Britain's biggest ever bid to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, thus allowing a free-for-all.

This is what it has become. Tilling's powerful defence of a 113 per cent increase in profits to an alltime high of £95m brought question marks plus a much more realistic bid from BTR: £664m with a cash alternative of 225p a share. All the while, BTR was buying Tilling shares in the market as hard as it could Tilling's reply to this verged on the self defeating: with proposals to sell the most alluring assets itself if the BTR bid failed.

BTR in turn pointed out that it could (although cause in the depressed product carefully not saying it would) prevent this desecration since it had control of enough shares to block approval of such deconglomeration. How, one asks, could the BTR board justify that to its own shareholders on the grounds of its previous arguments?

The odds are still on a BTR win - it is steadily building its stake in the market at the cash alternative price and its own shares are holding up well.

thousands of borrowers still wondering whether to accept the Halifax Bailding Society's offer to switch from repayment to endowment morteage you may find yourself paying a £12 transfer fee.

When we said in March that the Abbey National had agreed to drop a similar fee, the Halifax said it would do the same if quotations were accepted by the end of June. In the light of evidence that readers have been charged £12, the Halifax has now qualified its earlier states

Mr Alan Greenhalgh, the general manager, says that transfer fees will be waived only if borrowers plump for one of the five insurance companies with which a special deal has been struck. Although it declined to name them in March, those companies are: the Sun Alliance Legal and General, Royal Life, Guardian Royal Ex-change, and Eagle Star.

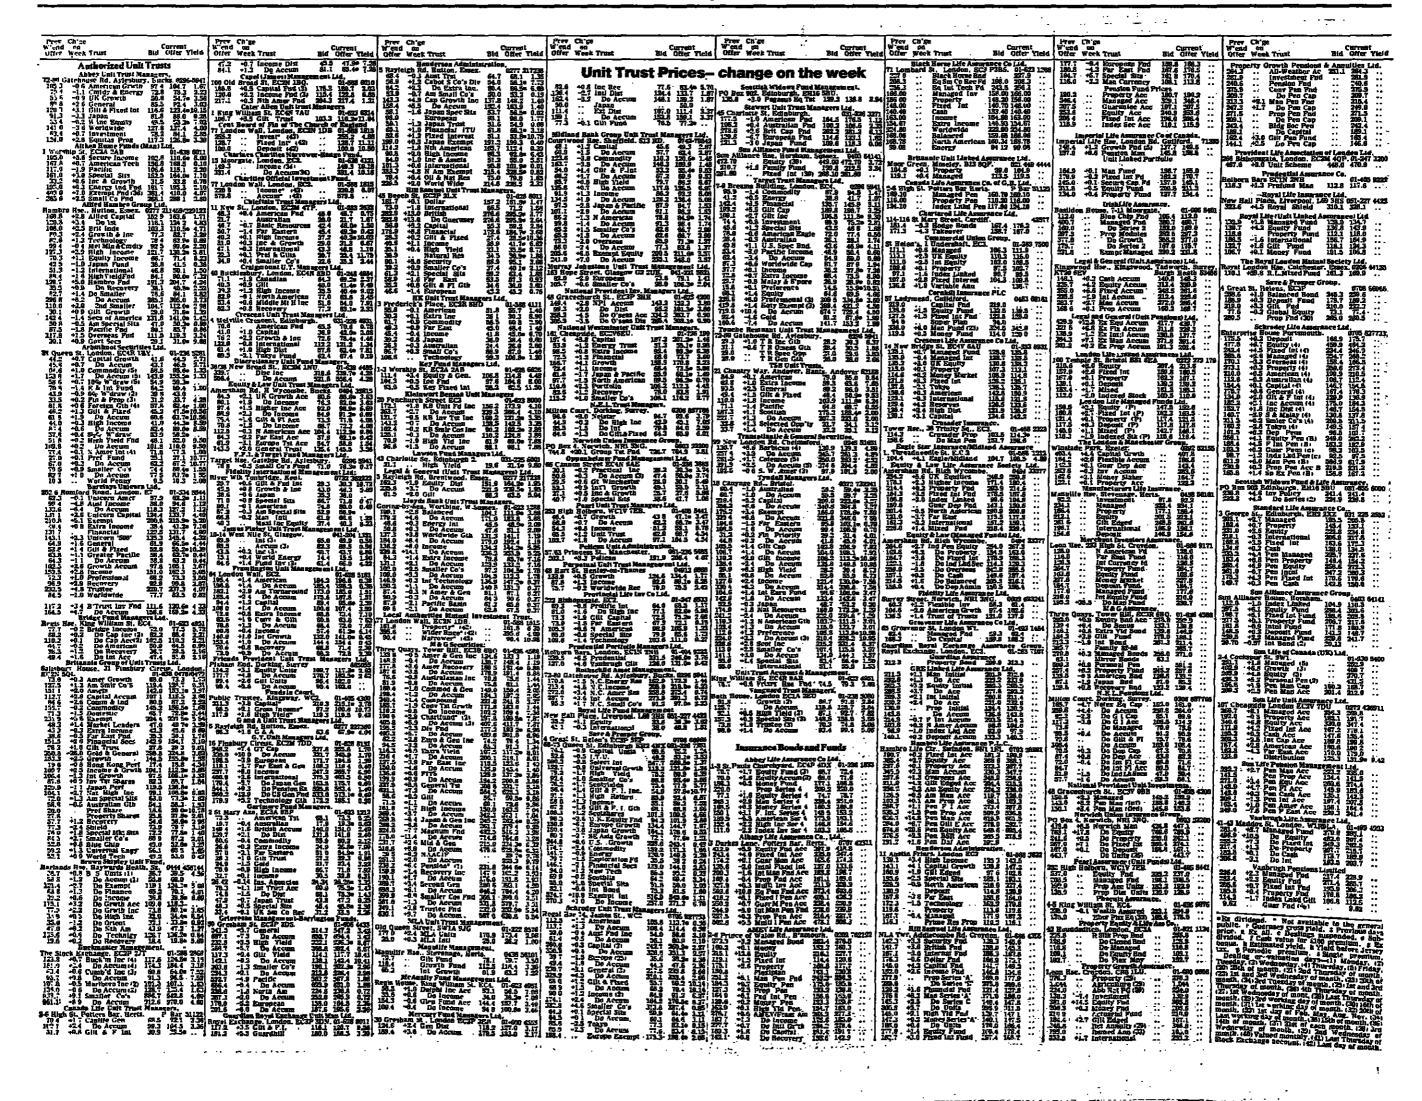

Borrowers who opt for any other company - especially 2 mutual society that does not pay commission -expect to pay the £12.

Mr Greenlagh admits that have opted for policies outside the Halifax scheme. At present, applications are being dealt with at the rate of 700 a day.

So, if you are one of the 600,000 borrowers to whom the Halifax wrote in January inviting them to switch from repayment to endowment when Mortgage Interest Relief At Source (Miras) came into force, do not be surprised if your initiative is rewarded by a demand for £12.

Even if you do opt for one of the big five, you may still have to pay if you do not use the form sent out by the Halifax in January. At least the Abbey National had the grace to admit it was a mistake to ask borrowers for £15.

Gateway catch When is 7.5 per cent interest not 7.5? Answer, when you lose one month's nterest on money withdrawn.

This is the catch with Gateway building society's Superplus Account which offers 7.5 per cent net of basic rate tax on investments of £500 or more, Cash can be withdrawn on demand but you lose one month's interest on money withdrawn and you cannot avoid the penalty by giving a month's notice on withdrawal.

This means that if you make any withdrawals during the course of the year it will be impossible to obtain the 7.5

advertised.
Probably the best "extra interest" account on offer is Cheltenham & Gloucester's Cheltenham Gold account, paying 7.25 per cent net of basic rate tax on sums of £1,000 or more with no penalty for withdrawals.
If you keep 25,000 in the account you

A private plan for elderly

More than half the people currently waiting for National Health Service treatment in hospitals are over the age of 55. Waiting lists for the more common operations can run into many months or even years.

A new medical insurance scheme from Private Patients Plan offers medical insurance to the elderly – including anyone up to the age of 75 – at an affordable price. PPP emphasizes that the object of the scheme is not to provide cover for long term chronic illness, but to ensure that anyone needing treatment for an acute condition is able to get that treatment without a long wait. The plan gives a full refund of all medical costs up to £4,000 in a year, or £8,000 for heart operations. Premium for a 65year-old is £11.65 a month or £15.75 for those in the 70-to-74 age bracket. No medical examination is required and the cover is renewable at all ages (though you must be under 75 to join).

To ciaim benefits the treatment required must be unobtainable through the National Health Service within six weeks of the patient seeing a consult-ant. If treatment is received in a NHS hospital without charge, a cash benefit of £15 a night is PPP claims that its Retirement Health Plan offers the elderly cheaper medical in-surance than that quoted by other companies. "This plan is another first for PPP since no other company offers a medical insurance scheme specifically for the retired person or mainly for the elderly", commented Mr John Phillips, PPP's chairman.

Tailored for the individual

Until recently private medical synonymous with BUPA and PPP. Crusader Insurance, the fourth largest private medical insurer specializing in group schemes, plans to change this with the introduction for the first time of private health schemes for the individual. It aims to settle within 48 hours of receiving a claim and argue its rates are cheaper in most cases than its competitors'. For example, it claims a single person aged between 18 and 29 under BUPACARE would pay a monthly premium Crusader's 13.76; a single person aged between 50 and 64 under BUPACARE would pay £26.96 in London as against E21.40 with Crusader; and a family living in the country where the parents are aged between 30 and 49 insured with BUPACARE would pay £34.45 as against Crusader's £27.52.

Crusader claims that the actual cover provided is better in most cases and it will pay the cost of a mother or father staying in hospital with a child which it says is a unique benefit. There are three scales of cover to choose from - London country and general. All provide the same cover for surgeon's anaesthetist's, and specialist's fees but the benefits payable for in-patient accommodation are tailored to the scale of hospital accommodation cover you choose. The amount of cash benefit payable if you have inpatient treatment free of charge in an NHS hospital also varies

Supplementary benefit

The form when unemployed school-leavers claim money

Any summer sun after the past few months of rain is not likely to be much consolation to those youngsters within weeks of leaving school, but with little prospect of finding themselves jobs. They have to face up to life on the dole.

Their immediate problem is 1% below Royal Bank of Scotland minimum deposit rate (3°4%) actually getting dole money. To get unemployment benefit, however, they need to have paid (£5.85 a week per child) National Insurance contributions at some time, and 16-year-old school-leavers will not have been able to do that. For them supplementary benefit is the alternative. One difficulty is that supplementary benefit is not paid automatically. Besides being affected by casual earnings and savings of over £2,500 (going up to £3,000 in November), they cannot claim the benefit until the end of the summer holiday. Most jobless school-leavers can start getting money of their own from supplementary benefit on the first Monday in September. By then the summer holidays are regarded as having

While the school-leavers may be hard pressed for cash in the meantime, so may be the parents who have to carry on feeding them. One consolation September claim date.

If they get other social security benefits as well, they can carry on getting the extra for each school-leaver in the family. This arrangement, too, stops from the first Monday in September.

Something similar applies at Christmas and Easter. School-leavers then cannot claim supplementary benefit until either the first Monday in January or the Monday after Easter Monday, whichever follows their date of leaving.

There are some exceptions to this. For example, school-leavers with children of their own can get supplementary benefit right away, as can disabled school-leavers or those not living at home and not being kept by their parents.

As a school-leaver there are a number of ways in which you can go about getting supplemen-tary benefit. First, you have to register as unemployed. If you are under 18 and need money, your careers officer can give you a card to take to an unemployment benefit office. Over-18s should go straight to this office. If you have to travel more than six miles, ask if you can make future claims by post. Ask for claim form B1 at the unemployment benefit office. Fill this form in and send it to your local social security office. Normally you need not go to this office yourself. If they want to see you, they will let you

Benefit is paid to you by the unemployment benefit office, usually be Girocheque every fortnight.

When you finally do claim, how much supplementary benefit can you expect? The amount ranges from £15.80 a week for a 16-year-old living at home, to £25.70 for an 18-year-old or over living away from home. You may also be able to get help with rent and rates, if you pay them.

If you intend to carry on studying part-time, you can still get supplementary benefit. However, you must agree to take a job if and when one turns up. If you are aged between 16 and 19 you can study up to 15 hours a week, including home-Clyde Petroleum's brief flirtation with Saxon Oil has ended. Yesterday Clyde sold its remaining 10 per cent stake in Saxon amounting to 1.5 million shares at 175p.

News of the sale of the shares wiped 5p from Saxon at 180p and dashed remaining hopes that the proposed merger between the two groups inight take place. Clyde had originally made an agreed bid of 122p a share, but news of a big oil find on block 16/8b in the North Sea, in which Saxon had a 50 between the two groups might take place. Clyde had originally made an agreed bid of 1220 a share, but news of a big oil find on block 16/3b in the North Sea, in which Saxon had a 50 per cent stake, put paid to that.

The Saxon board immediately urged its own shareholders to reject the terms which valued the company at £12m.

Saxon's financial adviscrs wrote to shareholders telling them the company was investigating ways of raising cash for further apparaisal drilling on the field, but ruled out further cash calls.

Marshall speeds up and dismantles Worcester

One of the delights of cricket is One of the delights of cricket is that even the dourest struggle can suddenly burst into dramatic life. Few games can have done so in such eventful fashion as yesterday's when fast bowling and batting wrested the centre stage from the medium-pace men and a thunderstorm provided a final twist in the last act before Hampshire won with two overs to suddenly burst into dramatic life. It was all highly unlikely after the first two days of attrition. They had not been uninteresting but Marshall-lifted the match on to a higher plane as he tore Worcestershire's second innings apart in the morning.

He looked a yard faster than on the previous two days and the unseemly chuckles on the Worcestershire bakony when Pridgeon, the nightwatchman, desperately fended a ball away from his heart where more the product of nervous anticipation than sadistic humour.

Centurions on the offensive

EDGBASTON: Warwickshire (5 pts) ew with Gloucestershire (8).
Not even Shepherd, whose form spectacular, could prevent Giou tershire's match with Warwickshire from petering out yesterday. For Warwickshire's second For Warwickshire's second wicket these two added 289, Amiss making his eighty-third first-class hundred and Lloyd is ninth, and by some way his highest score. Having just had a fortnight out of action with a back injury, Lloyd made a tortnous start. After 80 minutes he had added only eight to his overnight score of 28. What got him going was Lawrence's first over of the day, in which Lloyd hit four good boundaries. From then on he outpaced Amiss, working the ball well off his legs

A hundred from Amiss soon

A hundred from Amiss soon A handred from Amiss soon became a formality – as much, that is, as one ever can be. Every three or four overs he pounded the ball through the covers or forced it through midwicket. He has now moved into the first 30 run-makers of all time, having this season overtaken George Gunn (35,208). Really, the only way in which we might have had a result yesterday was if Warwickshire had collapsed. There was not time for them to Emburey had a brief, inconclusive spell and then Williams replaced Cowans. Williams in the first innings had bowled fast, straight and to a full length, much in contrast to Daniel, but this time he was rather off target. Wilkins thrashed him past cover for four, hooked him and then drove a full toss past mid-on, taking nine off three balls.

Daniel had to be summoned back to work and Wilkins, over-cuphoric after the previous over, launched a wild slash that ended up in the

Laughter on way to Tyburn

TAUTON: Sussex (24 pts) bed Somerset (4) by 10 wickets. Somerset (4) by 10 wickets.

Overnight, Somerset, following on, were 129 behind, with nine second-innings wickets in hand, though Lloyds and Richards had been going so comfortably on Thursday evening that the game seemed still to hold possibilities for them. But both were out quickly, Pichards to a varies strike from the Richards to a vague stroke from the first ball of the second over. This seemed to demoralize the side and it is the inevitable result of having great batsman that gloom sets in if he fails at a crtical time. It looked as if the match would be over before Botham, coming in at 72 for five, seemed at first to take the same view. He hit Barclay, who had bowled very well, for three sixes in an over. Give the lads a laugh on the way to Tyhum. But then he settled down to began to play cautiously. At lunch the score was 122 for seven, in 46 overs. Botham found a partner in the new Somerset partner in the new Somerset wicketkeeper, who looks quite a useful batsman. In the first innings he had been run out before he had even taken Gard (I owe this witticism to a senior Somerset committee man who had kindly been saving it up for me).

Gard had helped to put on 56 when he was splendidly caught low down at cover. he had been missed, at mid-on, when only five, but the Sussex fielding had much more pluses than minuses.

Botham continued to vary his mood. Two successful reverse sweeps off Barclay were followed by more cantion: three drives off le Roux, all for four and more cantion. He had, I hoped, a promising partner in Dredge, but the demon of Frome abandoned his classical defensive stroke, possibly forward defensive stroke, possibly because his nose is still a little sore. He made a violent hook, an elegant leg cut, and then a shot which I have never seen before, squarish cut which dropped beautifully over the head of third man (about halfway out) and went for four. Botham was last out and Susse needed only seven runs, which they obtained in two balls, Gard bowling. Botham keeping wicket. Somerset are not playing well at present.

Stylish victory for Mrs Edgar

Liz Edgar won the Everest Double Glazing Stakes at Hickstead yesterday, the first major event of the meeting, riding the sponsors' own horse Everest Forever. Mrs Edgar is one of the five riders from whom the British team for Sunday's Nations Cup will be chosen. Her victory yesterday makes her in-clusion in the team all the more likely.

Second in yesterday's competition was Germany's Gerd Wiltfang, the former world champion, on Goldika, who finished just ahead of Andre Chenn for France

on Impedoumi.

There were 55 starters in the class

- Ted Edgar said afterwards that his wife, who was the last to go, had found the wait so long that she had been asleen in the car 15 minutes before competing in the ring.

The course, designed by Pam Carruthers, was a curious mixture of big and small fences causing some carelessness. Norbert Koof, the world champion, on Fire. Nick Skelton on 51 James and Harvey Smith on Sanyo Technology all had four faults.

Nineteen horses went through to the six-fence jump-off including David Broome's Last Resort. This David Broome's Last Resort. This was only his second onting of the season and Broome, unwilling to hurry him, went for a slow clear round in the jump oft. Tony Newbury, on Mr Bun's The Rascal IV, produced the first cleer but his time of 46.3sec was soon overtaken. Gerd Wiltfang's round, on Goldika, in 39.2sec looked a winning one – Chenu on Impedoumi came close with 39.5sec but it was left to Mrs Edgar and the Hyear-old Everest Forever to beat the time by more than a second when time by more than a second when she completed a fast, stylish round in 37.91secs.

It had rained steadily throughou the class making the going sticky. Mrs Edgar said afterwards that if it had rained any more before the start of the class she was considering withdrawing Everest Forever.

In the afternoon the openin international class in the main arena fell to Ireland when Captain Gerry Mullins, on Mostrim, won the Everest Double Glazing team stakes with a clear round in 61.9 seconds. Andre Chenu, for France, came second in Krishna in 63.3 sec, and third was Australia's Liberty Hill ridden by 51-year-old Kevin Bacon.

Chenu represented his country in a Nations Cup event for the first time at Rome earlier this month where the team finished third. France's Faola D'Esela, the last to go in the class, completed the fastest round (59.8 sec) but a knockdown at the last fence put him out of the

Trickling home to Tarbert

By John Nicholls

What appeared on paper a straightforward long-distance race to Tarbert was quite different for most competitors in the Tomaria series yesterday. What was expected to take at the most 18 hours lasted far longer and most of the 240 boats still had not reached Tarbert after 24

Large and small yachts were equally affected by changeable conditions on their different courses, with only a few medium-sized boats finishing by mid-afternoon. They had sailed a 95-mile course from Gourock, with the great rock of Ailsa Graig as their farthest turning mark, rounded by the leaders at about four in the morning. Nicomaran, an Oyster 37, sailed by Matt Carney in handicap division C, was first round Ailsa and division C, was first round Ailsa and maintained her lead to the finish. She was far enough ahead of the next boat to be fairly certain of winning her class on handicap. Next home were three half-tonners, racing in IOR division B!.

As befits boats with similar ratings, they were close together throughout the race, and finished within minutes of each other. Second to finish and first in her class across the line was Flash.

second to finish and first in her class across the line was Flash, sailed by her owner, Barry Bullen, with her designer, Robert Humphreys, among her crew. She was closely followed by Local Hero, a sister ship sailed by Geoffrey Howison.

Howson.

Again, these boats would be so far ahead of their rivals on corrected time that they are unlikely to be beaten. Bullen won the Tomatin trophy last year and might be the first man to retain it in the nine-year inst man to reason it in the time-year history of the event. The half-ton-ners are also racing in the Scottish level rating championships. With 28 boats this class has a high entry, partly because the world championship will be held on the Clyde next

Promoter says paid ranks plan will go ahead

It is hoped to begin the professional tournament in autumn this year, probably in Britain, though Mr. Lord admits that much may depend on the attitude of the International Board. The board's emergency committee can consider matters other than the laws or the regulations relating to smattering.

To call such a meeting may smack of locking the stabler door but at least it would focus the board's mind on one specific issue on which they have steadfastly refused to make any direct comment for years.

The Lions' manager, Bill McBride, maintained that none of his party was involved. In Scotland the former national captain, Andy

The International Rugby Board sponsors, but dispensed with his will receive an appeal from one of services after only a year, will receive an appeal from one of their member countries for an emergency meeting after it was confirmed in Sydney yesterday that plans for a professional tournament were going ahead. Sir Nicholas Shehadie, the president of the Australian Rugby Union (ARU), has written to the board — wo usually meet cach March —and said: "I am confident that the Board will convene a meeting pretty soon." convene a meeting pretty soon."

Sir Nicholas's action came after the announcement by David Lored, the Australian sports promoter, that more than 200 players from the world's leading rugby countries had signed to play in professional tournaments to be held over the next two years. There was no indication of how the money would be raised to provide the estimated 520m necessary to stage the fournaments but Mr Lord said he had confirmed the plans because he wished to deny any South African involvement in them.

"I would love to see South Africa "I would love to see South Africa as one of the teams," he said. "But it's not prudent at the moment." There would be neither South African players nor South African money tied up in the venture, he claimed, adding that it would otherwise have been unfair to those players involved might have come under pressure from political grouns.

Of the 208 players alleged to be involved 25 are believed to be English, 24 Scottish, 21 Irish and a minimum of 18 Welsh. The total, it is said, includes 20 of the touring Lions in New Zealand.

John Lawrence, the secretary of the four Home Unions towns committee, said that any player discovered to have signed a contract to play in a professional circus would be ineligible for the Lions but that there would be no witch bunt, "I think it's stupid of a self-confessed undischarged bankrupt to make such an announcement in the middle of an important national tour." he said. despicable, it stinks to high

Two of them Mabbutt and Roberts, will be joining him in familiar white shirts. The 21-year-old Mabbutt, more industrious but less naturally gifted, maintains notable record. Since making his debut against West Germany in October, he is the only representative to be selected for the subsequent half a dozen inter-nationals.

Roberts, older than Mabbutt but professional for less than three years, completes an equally notable recovery. He has also been troubled by injury (strained knee ligaments and a broken toe) but the main damage was caused when he twice put through his own goal in the League (Milk) Cup quarter-final defeat by Burnley. His confidence then drained away to such a low ebb that it was as if he had run out of fuel. Consequently he was dropped by his club. Now a few months later, having fought his way back with typical aggression, he is picked for his country and gains the picked for his country and gains the first representative honour of his milicely career.

years ago. Yet the 1983 final should be analysed carefully by anyone fearful for football's survival. What was it about these two games between relegated Brighton and Hove Albion and one of the most famous cisbs in the world which suddenly had neutral observers dancing with joy? When all is said and done, a team costing millions of pounds had required two no more than half decent matches (and they should have lest the first) to defeat the hig-hearted underdogs. One's enthusiasm needs explanation.

The truth is that we have just experienced probably the most enexceptional demestic season since 1946 and then had our spirits uplifted by two matches at Wembley which recaptured some of the old flame of sportsmanship and uncertainty which over a century or more has made football the foremost sport in the world.

Uncertainty

The sportsmanship, if we schude some of Case's deplorable excesses in the first match, uncertainty, at least until half an hour into the replay, to Manchester United, abetted by a class-levelling pitch in the first encounter. Here was David and Goliath, with the possibility that the bookmakers had got the odds horribly wrong. Romance flowed. The High Court rightly kept Foster out of the first match, only for Stevens to be man of the moment. Wilkins, derided for several seasons by some supporters at Old Trafford, scored a marvel-lous goal. We searched for the to describe this quality that the Cup Final had given us. What could it be? Why, yes, it

Last Sunday, in Face the Press on Channel 4, Jack Dunnett, the President of the Football League, emphatically, indeed, astonishingly, denied that entertainment was one of the game's priorities, thereby putting himself singularly out of tune with the majority of the 50 million or so who watched the final and actually enjoyed it. What the two matches have done is reminded us of the real reasons why the public loves the game and that it is far too sportant to be left in the hands of the professionals and full time administrators like Mr Dunnett, all of whom have been encouraged in the last 20 years erroneously to believe that winning is what matters.

The cynics were saying that the only reason Wilkins scored such a super goal in the first recapturing something of that match was that he had no one to quality.

If it is true that the Brighton manager, Jimmy Melia, made a misjudgment in re-admitting Foster for the replay, disrupting the defence which had done so well on Saturday, the cheap, rancons sneers from the United section the crowd on Thursday which were directed at Foster provided one good reason for giving the competing clubs fewer

British face uphill struggle after failure in Fens

By John Wilcockson

A few moments inattention after hours of powerful riding cost the British team yesterday, allowing the Swiss, West Germans and the Americans to make memperted gains on the fifth day of the Milk Race. The stage from Bury St Edmunds had 12 miles to run, when the decisive phase was reached.

After four hours out in front, butting with consistent head winds across the Fens, a group of nine was about to be caught by the main group. The British professionals had done most of the chasing to reduce a gap of seven and a half minutes that existed 50 miles earlier. And they were still hoping that Keith Lambert, in the front group, ald be able to win the stage victory in lesiceter.

The gap between the two groups was less than 100 yars when three of the front group and the two minutes of passed by yeven newcomers, including the Americans, Eaton and Grewal, the Swiss, Blum and Loodi, and Ulrich Rottler, the West German lying second overall.

Already in front was the young Swedish rider, Stefan Brykt who immediately co-operated with the Americans to widen the gap to more than two minutes by the end. In the last two minutes by the end. In the last was made.

The gap between the two groups was long fifth were passed by seven newcomers, including the Americans, Eaton and Corewil, the Swiss, Blum and Loodi, and Ulrich Rottler, the West German lying second overall.

The Grat Britain amateur team was lought kaapping. Malcolm Elliott, who was lying fifth overnight after winning the exciting overnight after winning the evening admitted: "I was taking a breather when the counter at the was made."

The gap between three of spain caught leading overnight was counted in the foot s judges, and be now finds himself four minutes behind Rottler.

"I might want an operation after the light", the boxer said. "It's my option. In an operation, they go inside and shave the bone? Cooney meets Phillip Brown a former sparring partner, at Las Vegas in his first contest since he was stopped in the 13th round by Larry Holmes last Marvin Hagler's bout agains Wilford Scypion is not recognized as a middleweight world title bout by the two world bodies, the WBC and WBA. José Sulaiman, president of the WBC, refused to give the contest championship status, because of dispute over officials for the bout Wilfredo Gomez, of Puerto Rico. where Gomez, of Puerto Rico, had renounced his super-bentan-weight title because of weight problems. He may move up to the featherweight division.

HOCKEY: The six Southgate players who did not attend the last lengtand trainning weekend three weeks ago have been omitted from the squad of 17 invited for training at Bisham Abbey on June 5. The exercise includes two matches against the England under-21 side, Sydney Friskin writes. Clive Chapman, the chairman of the selection committee, said yesterday that the squad had been chosen on merit and availability. He explained that as the Southgate players had not attended the last training weekend they had, for the present, been omitted.

The alfresco charms of Glyndebourne

A break from the music with iced champagne

Summer broke through the rain clouds suddenly this week, just in time for the opening of 1983's opera sea Glyndebourne in East Sussen with its traditional affresco delights of food and wine in the interval. The festival began on Thursday and will continue to August 10, a total of 64 Highlights will include two per productions. Mozart's Idomeneo, last given at Glyndebourne in 1974, returns in a production directed by Trevor Nunn, joint artistic director of the Royal Shakespeare Company, who i making his first venture into the world of opera. Also working at Glyndebourne for the first time in this productio will be John Napier, who has designed several of Trevor Nunn's theatre presentations (including Cats) and David Hessey, responsible for lighting, Bernard Haitink will conduct. The second new production is of Rossini's La Cenerentola, directed by John Cox and with designs by Allen Charles Klein. For the first eight performances, Donato Renzetti, the Italian conductor will make his British debut. Stephen Barlow will conduct the rest. (Photographs: Brian

Heseltine comes to the defence of a gate

The emergence of Mr James Callaghan, the former Prime Minister, as the leading opponent of Labour's defence policy has meant a serious loss of publicity for Mr Michael Heseltine, the former future Prime Minister.

Being the Secretary for Defence, he had reasonable expectations of fulfilling this role. In the circumstances, was he doing all right?

he doing all right?

I went in search of him yesterday to Henley, his constituency. "Vittorio and Christian", proclaimed the sign opposite the railway station. That seemed a rather excessive slogan to employ even on behalf of an ego the size of Mr Heseltine's.

I traced Mr Heseltine to the village of Watlington, where he was living quietly as a part-time seller of council houses. The Secretary for Defence started this business when a civilian, being once employed as Secretary for the Environ-

Yesterday he was about to tour a council estate. Apart from soliciting votes, his purpose was to urge those who had not bought their homes to do so, and to congratulate those who had. The famous politician emerged from the head-quarters of the Watling Conservatives - a fine figure of a suit. He was giving a press conference in Watlington later that day to mark the fourth anniversary of the Conserva-tive council sales policy. We sped to Park View. To Mr Heseltine's satisfaction, embourgeoisification was rag-ing there. "Do you own this?" was his question at every door. "You do? Good. That's what I like to hear ... " The counter-revolution seemes to be going well.

From across the road came the sound of a woman with a North-eastern accent addressing Mr Heseltine volubly. She was complaining about her gate. Furthermore, she had no plans to buy her council house. In addition, since she moved here from Consett three years ago she had found Heseltine was facing his first test of the day.

She was constrasting her plight with the repairs recently done to the house opposite. "They did not have to pay". She beckoned Mr Heseltine into the house. "I see nothing wrong with the gate", he turned and muttered to us as she led him in. Some negotiations appeared to ensue between her and the man who, as Secretary for the Environment, was presumably in charge of the nation's publicly owned gates. Straining to hear, I could not understand the point at issue - being in any case, unfamiliar with this muni-ficent world in which, if your gate went wrong, you did not necessarily have to pay for it. On and on the discussion went. "What's wrong with the bloody gate", I regret I irritably asked the woman. hoping to cut through to the heart of the issue. "What's wrong with it", she thundered

Whereupon, from her hallway, she produced another gate, a battered and broken one. The excellent gate through which we had passed was, it seemed, the wrong gate.

The eate which we at first saw had been constructed by her husband at his own expense. She was demanding compensation. Mr Heseltine applied his mind to the problem. There was talk of a special grant.

"I don't say it applies to that gate, but there is a provision for compensation". he said. "But they've got a perfectly good gate", I remonstrated. "No. no. That's the wrong gate", Mr Heseltine explained to me.

The minister is a man who does not like to hear, or be the bearer of bad news. And he left clearly not satisfied that he had resolved the problem.

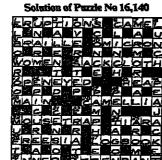

On reflection, it seemed a good world in which a magnifico such as the British Secretary for Defence can suddenly become involved in intractable negotiations with an intransigent voter over a council house gate.

In the garden

There is not much that can be done to counteract the effects of the exceedingly wet April and May. The rains will have washed plant food down into the soil below the reach of many shallow rooted plants, so be generous with fertilizers on the lawn and all parts of the garden.
In the southern half of the country, tender plants – geraniums, fuchsias, dahlias, lobelias and the like – also tomatoes and marrows may be planted out now. In the north and in cold spots it would be wise to wait until the end of the first week of June.

Another sowing may be made now of lettuces (preferably a packet of mixed varieties) radishes, an early variety of pea and dwar

The Daily Mail asks what useful results can come from the meeting of Western leaders at Williamsburg There is not much point in the leaders going there to lecture each other, but what they can do is to other, but what they can do b to reaffirm their resolve to eschew begger-my-neighbour policies to protect their home industries. Otherwise there is a real danger that their short-sighted nationalist econ-omic policies could snuff out world recovery.

Mrs Thatcher will not predict when unemployment will start to fall, consistent with her belief that it has nothing to do with her, says the Daily Mirror. "But Norman, Nigel. Geofficy and Keith are making promises, even if they are not all singing exactly the same song."
